

This publication was prepared by the Water Resources Research Institute of The University of North Carolina and the Wake Soil and Water Conservation District under an Urban and Community Forestry Grant administered by the N.C. Division of Forest Resources.

Authors:

Scott Bode, Research Assistant
College of Forest Resources, N.C. State University and
Jeri Gray, Technology Transfer Specialist
Water Resources Research Institute

Thanks to the following for information, advice and review:

- Rick Bailey, Administrator, Wake Soil and Water Conservation District
- Barry New, Urban Forestry Specialist, N.C. Division of Forest Resources
- Roger Hamsard, Water Quality Specialist, Natural Resources Conservation Service
- Rick Hamilton, Extension Forester, N.C. State University
- Brian Bledsoe, Environmental Engineer, N.C. Department of Environment, Health, and Natural Resources
- Wendell Gilliam, William Neal Reynolds Professor of Soil Science, N.C. State University
- Dennis Hazel, Research Assistant, College of Forest Resources, N.C. State University
- Silvia Terziotti, Computer Specialist and Carole Tarbox, Cartographic Technician, U.S. Geological Survey, Raleigh, NC
- Keith W. Kriet, Certified Arborist, Community Environments, Cary, NC

Maintaining and Restoring Urban Riparian Buffers

A guide for landowners and local governments in Wake County

